

CASH FLOW ASSETS

If you've ever wondered how it is possible to have more personal liberty and the freedom to live your life on your own terms, the answer is really quite simple.

The answer is to buy assets. What is an asset?

An asset, at its most basic is very easy to define.

And, the difference between an asset and a liability is a crucial point of understanding. Assets are anything you own that pays you. Liabilities are anything you own that costs you. Simple. Given this definition, you may have an epiphany about certain items. For example, your home and your car, are probably not assets for you!

The bank calls your home or car an asset for one reason and for one reason only... CASH FLOW. When you have a loan against these items your lender will list these as assets because they are earning cash flow on your monthly re-payments.

Then, how can you turn the tables and create your own assets? What kinds of opportunity exist for you to create cash flow? CVIG can help you answer these questions and show you how you can get solid cash on cash returns just like a banker! Call or email us today to inquire about this rare opportunity.

The reduction in home prices and the relative stability (and increases in some cases) in rental rates creates a situation for stronger cash on cash returns than in most parts of the US economy.
